Olikara, N. People died by the hundreds. It's a type of story I almost never read, a multi-family saga spanning decades, but the setting made it irresistible--China, from the Boxer rebellion to Japanese occupation, changing ways of life vertiginously fast, sparks flying in clashes of modernity in all its guises, from philosophy to foreign military rearing at the shores, and the millennial traditions. They were cut with scissors, pricked with pins, even prodded with burning irons onto sharp spikes in a cage hung from the ceiling to provide Bathory with a "blood shower".
